Huntington University PLEX taking shape quickly

This summer has been very busy at Huntington University with all the construction taking place on campus. There is still plenty of work to be completed but the new gymnasiums, stadium, and other projects are beginning to take shape. FCI Construction is the contractor for the project.

According to Huntington University's COO, Russ Degitz, "The renovation and expansion of the PLEX continues to be an exciting project for Huntington University. We are currently putting the finishing touches on a major step in the project, namely the completion of the Platt Arena renovation. We look forward to hosting events in the arena this fall and winter."

"We also recently finished the installation of exterior lighting in King Stadium and eagerly anticipate hosting soccer games under those lights this fall. Over the course of the upcoming year, work will be focused on the new construction to the east of the existing building, which will include a new gym, weight/cardio area, new main lobby, significantly expanded restroom facilities, athletic and faculty office suite, robust concessions area, and a team shop for Forester Athletics apparel. The university is excited about this transformative project that will have a major impact on our campus and the greater Huntington community," said Degitz.

Nick Alwine, president of FCI Construction said, "On February 27, 2023, the transformation of Platt Arena officially commenced, marking a significant milestone. It has been full court pressure since that point as we have been actively working to reorient the gymnasium by 90 degrees. The project encompassed a range of upgrades, including a new floor, steel support structures, sound panels for improved acoustics, updated finishes and a modern video board. The collaborative efforts of the project team enabled us to overcome supply chain challenges, ensuring readiness for the first Athletic event in the redesigned space on September 2. We are thrilled for the University to showcase the transformation that has unfolded within the walls of the PLEX."

Shown in the photo above is the new gym in progress that will host the Huntington University Foresters in the upcoming season. The gym is taking shape, but several more additions will take place prior to its being ready for use around Labor Day. Below is a photo of the new weight room, left, and the athletic and faculty office suite, robust concessions area and a team shop for Forester Athletics apparel shown at right.

Alwine went on to say, "Amidst this ambitious interior transformation, substantial progress has also been made on the new addition. All interior concrete slabs have been successfully installed, and the placement of exterior metal panels and masonry is underway. We are currently ahead of our enclosure milestone to be ready for Winter. Beginning in late February 2024, we will start the process of integrating the last of the scheduled interior renovations to the new additions, with a targeted completion date of summer 2024."

The Chamber encourages the community to come and see the new facility once it is complete. Anyone that has never attended a Forester athletic event in the past, should do so this year. Once you start following Forester athletics, you will be hooked. It is some of the best sports in the area.

Jim Wilson to retire after long career in Huntington

A long-time local realtor and developer, Jim Wilson, has decided to hang up his cleats and retire from his business, Wilson Realty and Development, Inc. The building the business is located in, two properties and all of the interior furnishings will be sold at auction on Saturday, September 30. The business is located at 261 W. Market Street.

Wilson wrote a paper for the Cosmopolitan Club, Huntington, where he said, "I know that I'm in the twilight of my life. I've been so richly blessed in so many ways throughout my life. I'm not worthy, but then nobody is worthy in the presence of Christ."

He went on to say, "Lately, I've been reflecting on my life. I've worked hard all my life, doing my best and I've achieved far more than I thought possible, but there's so much more I could have done!"

Wilson, originally from Richmond, Indiana, graduated from Richmond High School. He then went on to study mechanical engineering at Purdue University, where he graduated in 1964. Wilson still considers the most enjoyable activity was as player-coach of their fast-pitch softball team, which won the campus championship his last two years against all the fraternities and residence halls.

After graduating from Purdue in 1964, Wilson accepted a position at Chevrolet-Muncie, a transmission plant with 2,000 workers, and was one of a very few engineers with an MBA selected to be groomed for top management. After working in the manufacturing plant with hundreds of hourly workers, learning everything there was to know, and being sent to Detroit and Flint, Michigan for continuous training, he decided factory work was not for him.

Wilson then learned that Huntington College (now University) was looking for an economics professor. He was hired and came to HU to teach economics and business for half the salary at Chevrolet. Along with teaching, he has written many papers and three books on various subjects and continued this endeavor after leaving the College. At the College he soon met baseball coach, Ray Zimmerman, and volunteered to help with the team. When Zimmerman made the decision to move back home to Canada, he recommended Wilson for the coaching position.

Over the 13 years Wilson coached, the HU team won the conference championship 12 times and were undefeated six years including the last four years, with a conference winning percentage of 90 percent. While he coached, HU also won the NAIA District 21 state championship three times, runner-up four times and second runner-up three times. Wilson was named conference Coach of the Year 11 times, Indiana Coach of the Year twice and Midwest Coach of the Year in 1974. Forest Glen baseball facility was also transformed from a pasture to a ballfield under his leadership.

Wilson's real estate sales, building, developing, appraising and investment career began in 1978 after leaving Huntington College. He invested in real estate houses, designed and built Avon Place apartments and his own home. He has also developed several subdivisions. His office, which is being sold at auction, was originally a Texaco Service Station which he remodeled from his own design. His home church, Trinity United Methodist, owns a retreat center at Lake Webster which Wilson was the general contractor for.

"I've personally sold over a hundred million dollars in real estate, but it's in developing and building that I've had the most impact," said Wilson. He continued, "I directly and indirectly have added over $40 million to the tax base of Huntington City and County."

Wilson also credits coming through many of life's challenges with support from his wife Gloria, good friends and the good Lord's help. He is thankful that his two sons, Todd and Eric, live close to home at present. For nine years Todd and his family were missionaries in Ukraine, and Eric was in Army Intelligence in Iraq for eight years. Both are graduates of Huntington North High School and Huntington University.

Amongst the many community service projects he was involved with, many will remember Wilson for his provision of 2,500 American flags each year that decorated the streets of Huntington on the Fourth of July for 20 years. Wilson also served as president of Habitat for Humanity for several years and provided an office and secretarial help. He chaired the community free Thanksgiving dinner, hosted by Trinity United Methodist Church, for 32 years.

Wilson said, "So, no matter which fork I could have taken, the good Lord has abundantly blessed me and my family, just as he would have if I'd chosen another road, because he can use us wherever we go and whatever we do." He has had many health struggles in recent years and concluded, "I hope people don't remember me the way I am now, but the way I was in my prime and how I'm going to be in Heaven – young, vibrant, high energy, physically strong, healthy and mentally alert and the eternal optimist."

Shown in the photo are several awards Wilson has received over the years to include the HC Centennial Medallion. Also shown are teams he has coached at Huntington University and photos of him with Hank Aaron, Oscar Robertson and more.
